William Congreve, an English dramatist of the 18th century, once said, "Music hath charms to soothe a savage breast, to soften rocks, to bend a knotted oak." That is so true. The ability to make music would seem to be a fundamental feature of the human species. Man appeared on this earth as a self-contained musical instrument equipped to sing, hum, whistle, and clap his hands. That should not surprise us since man was made in the image of God, and the Word of God seems to imply that God Himself sings. It is written of God the Father in Zephaniah 3:17, "He will joy over thee with singing." In Hebrews 2:12 we read of God the Son, "I will declare thy name unto my brethren, in the midst of the church will sing praise unto thee." And the Holy Spirit sings through the Church according to Ephesians 5:18-19.

Satan is a deceiver. He is using music and the depraved mind of man to produce that which would promote ungodliness and unrighteousness. When a person comes to Christ, he finds new directions in music. Psalm 40:3 says, "And he hath put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God." This particular word "new" means new in kind rather than new in sequence. Therefore the kind of music a Christian listens to should be evaluated carefully to be sure it is pleasing to the Lord.

I hope and pray that this issue of Reflections will stimulate your mind as you consider what the Bible says about music. For those who know the Lord, the words of Johann Sebastian Bach will have meaning: "The aim and final reason of all music should be nothing else but the glory of God and the refreshment of the spirit."

Serving God Through Music

E. James Bos

There is one thing that should distinguish a Christian musician from any other type of musician – a biblical foundation and philosophy for his music ministry. Christian musicians have a tremendous responsibility to examine their music thoroughly in the light of biblical instruction and example. The Word of God is filled with references to music. We may learn from the Scriptures, both by precept and example, how to maintain a music ministry which honors our holy, righteous Lord.

The Principle of the Redeemed Life – Exodus 15

Immediately following the crossing of the Red Sea through God's miraculous power, the people of Israel were led by Moses in a great song of praise. It is the first song recorded in Scripture, and it contains some important lessons for us. First, it is a song of redemption – a clear picture of the ultimate redemption which God has since provided through His Son, Jesus Christ. Second, it is a song of response. The verbs in the last verse of chapter 14 and the first verse of chapter 15 summarize Israel's response: "they saw . . . they feared . . . they believed . . . they sang." On the basis of what they believed, they sang. In response to the redemption they had experienced, they sang praises. Only those who are redeemed have such confidence. Only the redeemed have a true song.

The Principle of the Cleansed Life – Psalms 32, 51

The effective Christian musician must have not only a redeemed life but also a life which remains cleansed from known sin. He must not, as someone has said, "sing the concert first and tune the instrument afterward."

David found that after his sin with Bathsheba his music was empty and ineffective. He revealed in Psalms 32 and 51 some of his inner turmoil during the time (approximately a year) that the sin remained unconfessed. Apparently he could not sing until things were made right with God (see Ps. 51:14). Only after confession was made and forgiveness was experienced did his singing become evidence once again (see Ps. 32:7). The principle is the same today: sinning will keep us from singing, at least in a way that is spiritually effective. But it is also true that confession and cleansing will restore the believer's song.

The Principle of the Indwelling Word – Colossians 3:16

Colossians 3:16 must be the foundation of the Christian musician's philosophy of music ministry. He must not have just a casual contact with God's Word, but a regular, consistent intake of its truth. "Let the Word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom . . ." Only then will music reach its intended purpose in the plan of God. This will also protect the Christian musician from the danger of placing too much emphasis on performance and personality and too little on spiritual maturity through the application of the principles of Scripture. The Christian musician should possess a thorough knowledge of God's Word, not merely have a passing acquaintance with a few verses. He must have a daily, consistent intake of the Word if his music is to be used of God effectively to bring spiritual results.

The Principle of the Controlling Spirit – Ephesians 5:18–19

The command, "Be filled with the Spirit" (Eph. 5:18) means that the believer is to be controlled by the Spirit of God. The next verse makes it very clear that the Holy Spirit's control applies directly to musical expression. It is not an option to be considered, but a command to be obeyed. Adherence to the truth of this passage will affect not only the music, but more importantly, the consistency of the life of the musician.

The Principle of Musical Excellence – 1 Chronicles

All that we do represents the God whom we serve, and the essence of His being is excellence. This is illustrated beautifully in the music ministry which was organized by King David as he was specifically instructed by God (1 Chron. 28:19). One of the major qualifications of these full-time music ministers was their skillfulness developed through diligent study and practice. They were set apart exclusively for this ministry so that they could give full attention to become the best-qualified, best-prepared musicians they could be (1 Chron. 15:22; 25:7; 28:21). Our goal should be no less, for we serve the same God. He is worthy of our best – anything less is sin.

The Principle of Spiritual Preparation – 1 Chronicles

The Levitical musicians were to be spiritually prepared for their musical ministry. Their work was considered a spiritual ministry. For this reason they were required to be sanctified for service. If anything of lasting value is to be accomplished by means of music, we should follow their example. Musicians who follow the principles of the Bible must be spiritually prepared.

The Principle of Unity in Ministry – 2 Chronicles 5:13

One of the most vivid word-pictures in the Bible is the description in 2 Chronicles 5. The work of building the temple – the place of worship – was finished. The priests and the Levite musicians took their places in preparations for a great expression of worship. All of the singers and skilled instrumentalists along with the 120 priests with trumpets were sanctified for service. The sound they produced must have been magnificent! Even more beautiful, however, was their unity which is described in verse 13: "The trumpeters and the singers were as one to make one sound . . . in praising and thanking the Lord." This indicates, I believe, not merely unison in music but unified musicians.

In summary, those of us who serve God through music should remember that this is God's work and that only through submitting ourselves and our music to the scrutiny and standards of His Word can God be glorified.

Reflections

WHAT DID DAVID'S

Neil A. Holliker

The most specific Scripture references to music in worship are found in the Books of the Chronicles where numerous details are given about the music of the Temple in Jerusalem during the time of David and Solomon. When we read these accounts, many of us tend to think about this Temple music in terms of what we know today: a majestic Reformation chorale like "A Mighty Fortress is Our God," a favorite hymn of praise like "How Great Thou Art," or a great oratorio like Handel's "Messiah." However, such musical images must be divorced from the mind, and we must think in very different terms if we wish to approach an accurate conceptualization of the music used for worship by David or any other biblical personality.

Music in General During the Temple Period

There are no examples available of any of the actual music from the era of the first Temple and neither do the Scriptures provide this kind of detail. However, much research has been done in this area. A study of Jewish historical sources and the background of other Near East cultures coupled with current archaeological findings in the Near East make it possible for one to arrive at several generalizations as to some of the characteristics of music in the time of David:

1. Music was modal, that is, the notes in the scales used were in a different arrangement than what we know today as major or minor keys.
2. The tonality was probably based on a quarter-tone system rather than the half-step system to which we are accustomed in Western civilization today.
3. The music was chiefly unrhythmical. It was not bound metrically by small measures of 2/4, 3/4, or 4/4 that we use today. The flow of the music was simply derived from the words of the text which was being sung.
4. Texts were sung without any harmony. As is the case today, the Oriental of the Near East finds beauty in a melodic line and in intricate ornamentation of that line.
5. The music was never written down, but transmitted orally.

Musical Instruments of the Temple Period

It is in the area of musical instruments that the Scriptures give us the most information concerning the music that accompanied worship during the time of David.

From the days when the first Temple was in the planning stages under David's reign as King of Israel to the time of Solomon and even to the days of Hezekiah and Josiah there was a marked uniformity in the use of musical instruments in services of worship. The passage from 1 Chronicles 16:4-6 provides a typical illustration.

And he (David) appointed certain of the Levites to minister before the ark of the LORD, and to record, and to thank and praise the LORD God of Israel: Asaph the chief, and next to him Zechariah, Jeiel, and Shemiramoth, and Jehiel, and Mattithiah, and Eliab, and Benaniah, and Obedom: and Jeiel with psalteries and with harps; but Asaph made a sound with cymbals; Benaiah also and Jahaziel the priests with trumpets continually before the ark of the covenant of God.

As we examine the Hebrew Old Testament, we find these instruments to be the kinnor and the nevel from the string family, the metziltayim from the percussion family, and the hatzozerah from the brass family.

The kinnor is the most frequently mentioned instrument in the Old Testament. The account of its origin is found in Genesis 4:21. It is listed many times in Chronicles and Psalms, and it is the instrument used by David to soothe the heart of Saul. From all available evidence (which is considerable) the kinnor may be described as a small lap-held variety of lyre.

It consisted of a wooden resonator box with two upright arms, a cross bar, and 3 to 11 gut strings. The strings of the instrument would be tuned to certain notes of the scale-type referred to above. These scales may be thought of in terms of the pentatonic scales found in many Oriental cultures today, that is, five-note scales, less than an octave, and with intervals different from our whole-step/half-step system.

In many English Bible translations, kinnor is translated "harp." This gives the twentieth-century Westerner the wrong impression, in that he immediately envisages the grandness of the harp of our generation. On the contrary, one must think of this often-mentioned Old Testament instrument as a small folk instrument with a soft sound, capable of playing 3 to 11 notes of a modal scale pattern, and used primarily to accompany singing.

The other Old Testament string family instrument is the nevel. The word means skin or skin bottle and refers to the resonator frame of the instrument made of animal skins. The nevel was a small, open-frame harp with 10-12 strings. It was larger than the kinnor, so it would thus be lower in pitch. It would play only those 10 to 12 notes to which its strings were tuned. As with the kinnor, this tuning would correspond to the modal scale to which a particular text was sung. Like the kinnor, the sound of the nevel would be much smaller and much more limited than the present-day harp. It is the kinnor and the nevel we read of so many times in the King James Version as the "psalttery and the harp."

specimens that have been found are somewhat cone-shaped and range in diameter from four to eight inches. These metziltayim would in no way produce the enormous volume of sound one is accustomed to hearing from a pair of cymbals today.

The hatsoserah is mentioned 29 times in the Old Testament. This brass family instrument is a trumpet for which Moses was given instructions by God to make (Num. 10:2). The instrument was made of silver which was hammered or beaten. In Numbers it was used for signaling purposes and in Chronicles and Psalms it functioned in services of worship. While no hatsoserah from either the first or second Temple period exists, depictions from 250 B.C. and later show an instrument made from a straight tube approximately two feet long which is flared at one end and has a cup-shaped mouthpiece at the other. At the most, the hatsoserah would be able to produce three to four different notes. An estimate of those partials of the harmonic series in present-day notation would be as follows:

2 Chronicles 5:13 indicates that no less than 120 hatsoseroth (the plural form) were heard with one voice (in unison) along with singers. While the sound of the hatsoserah would be closer to a present-day instrument than any of those previously mentioned, one should associate with it a more mellow, less well-defined sound and keep in mind the limited 3-4 note range of the instrument.

It is interesting to note in a study of musical instruments from the Old Testament that once the Temple in Jerusalem was constructed and organized services were held there, certain musical instruments that had been used in praise of God on some occasions in the past were not brought into the orchestra. One of these is the toph (the tambourine). We read of this instrument in Saul's meeting of the prophets (1 Sam. 10:15) and with Miriam's dance of joy (Ex. 15:20). It is also mentioned in several Psalms.

Another instrument mentioned several times in the Old Testament is the halil (a simple flute). Like the toph, it makes no appearance in the Temple orchestra. The usual explanation for this is that these instruments had associations with female symbolism and cultic rites which made their use unacceptable in worship of Yahweh.

The most well-known instrument of Jewish culture is undoubtedly the shophar (the ram's horn). This is the one instrument of Jewish antiquity which is still sounded in orthodox Jewish services today. Oddly, though, the shophar was never included as part of the instrumental ensemble to accompany Temple worship. Its loud sound made it an effective signaling instrument as in the battle of Jericho, but not appropriate for an orchestra in the Temple. The shophar is even more limited than its cousin, the hatsoserah, in that it can produce only two basic tones, a tonic note and a fifth above.

The Rationale for David's Orchestra

The Old Testament as well as other sources have provided us with a very brief overview of music at the time of David. The information might be looked upon only as historical data if we did not at least make some mention of the raison d'être for all of this. The passage in 2 Chronicles 5:11-14 is an apt illustration. As the Ark of the Covenant was about to be moved into the newly completed first Temple, a great host of individuals were assembled with kinnor, nevel, metziltayim, and hatsoserah. Verse 13 indicates that the purpose of this assembly was to praise and thank the Lord. The reaction of God to this praise as seen in verse 14 of the passage was one of acceptance as His glory in a cloud filled the Temple.

David's orchestra enhanced many special occasions in the life of God's people. And as those individuals who were involved in musical service sought to truly bring praise and glory to God, this praise was duly accepted and encouraged by Him. All of this provides an excellent example for the admonition of our assemblies of believers today.

What Is A Good Hymn?

E. James Bos

The singing of hymns is one of the most important, yet most neglected areas in the life of many believers. Hymns are opportunities for us to express our worship to God. They help us to focus our attention on our unworthiness and His "worth-ship." Hymns not only prepare us for worship – they are worship. Hymns teach and reinforce spiritual truth and remind us of our responsibility to commit our lives totally to God.

In the hope that better understanding of hymns will produce better participation in singing them, let us examine some criteria of a good hymn.

A Good Hymn is God-Centered in Focus

A good hymn is more objective than subjective. It focuses more attention on God and on Jesus Christ than on man. When subjectivity is present (as it should be at times) that aspect should remain subordinate to the ultimate purpose of the glory of God.

The best hymns are not introspective, magnifying man's problems, but rather they magnify God's person. They may refer to man's sinful condition, but only as a contrast to God's mercy and grace. They deal with His worthiness, His majesty, His holiness, His wisdom, power, and truth. Hymns reflect who God is and what He has done: His mighty work of creation, His provision of redemption in Jesus Christ, and all that He continues to do in and through the believer. Thus, we have hymns of admonition, confession, meditation, assurance, comfort, and consecration. Hymns should lead us to God and not leave us contemplating our problems. Hymns should elevate our thoughts and help us view our circumstances from God's perspective. In order to accomplish this, personal experience must be subjected to biblical truth. The songs we sing should be selected not only for the emotional effect they produce but also for the message they deliver and the challenge they present.

Whether we realize it or not, our beliefs and our concept of God are being shaped by what we sing.

A Good Hymn is Biblical in Content

The message of a hymn must be biblically accurate and substantial in content. Believers need solid spiritual food in order to grow; this must be consistently available to them not only in preaching and teaching but also in the hymns that are selected and sung. The Word of God speaks directly to this in Colossians 3:16. We are commanded to "let the Word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom, teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your heart to the Lord." If true teaching and admonishing is to be accomplished through our singing, we must thoroughly examine the content of our hymns as to their biblical content, leaving out those that are theologically inaccurate, sentimentally shallow, or misleading. We must be as conscious of theological soundness in our hymns as we are in what we permit to be preached in our pulpits and taught in our classrooms. Whether we realize it or not, our beliefs and our concept of God are being shaped by what we sing. Let us be certain that the hymns we sing are biblically accurate and teach and reinforce the ministry of the Word.

A Good Hymn is Dignified in Style

A quality hymn should have a sense of dignity both in its text and in its musical style. It should be characterized by such literary qualities as singleness of theme, preciseness of meaning, beauty of poetry, and progression of thought. A hymn should contain depth and sincerity of our belief and relationship to God.

A Hymn That Is Good

E. Margaret Clarkson, in an article entitled "What Makes a Hymn Good?" (Christianity Today, June 27, 1980), sums it up correctly when she writes,

To write a hymn is to do more than use correctly certain techniques. It is to look on the face of God, to worship in His presence, embrace His will, accept His Cross and live daily under its obedience; it is then, having learned the disciplines of good writing, to sing God's grace. True hymn writers have not primarily sought to write hymns but to know God; and knowing Him, they could not but sing. Theirs are the hymns that have lived through the ages and will live into the future. We need this kind of hymn writing today if our generation will contribute anything real to the church's treasury of worship and praise.

BOOK REVIEW

The Christian, the Arts, and Truth:

Regaining the Vision of Greatness

by Frank Gaebelein; edited and with an introduction by D. Bruce Lockerbie (Multnomah Press, 1985, $10.95).

Review by Neil A. Holliker

In recent years, evangelicals have come of age intellectually. With the strengthening of academic standards in their schools, colleges, and seminaries, the tendency toward anti-intellectualism has declined. However, a parallel tendency to what may be called "anti-aestheticism" remains. There are many solid Bible-believing Christians who look down upon good music as highbrow, who confuse worship with entertainment, who deplore serious drama as worldly yet are contentedly devoted to third-rate television shows, whose tastes in reading run to the piously sentimental, and who cannot distinguish a kind of religious calendar art from honest art. For these individuals better aesthetic standards are spiritually suspect. Such are the observations of Frank Gaebelein from the vantage point of viewing evangelicals for almost three quarters of a century.

Lockerbie begins the book with a 35 page biographical tribute to his mentor, Frank Gaebelein. Details are given of Gaebelein's home life, education at Harvard, 41 years as headmaster at the famous Stony Brook prep school, years as an editor at Christianity Today, involvement with the production of the New International Version, and editorial work on the Expositor's Bible Commentary.

An Aesthetic Problem

In this book, 21 of Gaebelein's previously written articles have been organized by Lockerbie under six headings: the Aesthetic Problem, Education and the Arts, Music, Literature, Leisure, and Christian Humanism. The common thread found in each of these sections is the evangelical and his tension with the aesthetic aspects of life. So many Christians, it seems, have a contented ignorance of much that is aesthetically unworthy and a satisfaction with the mediocre because it is so familiar. This is amply illustrated in the book with numerous examples from art, literature, and music.

Gaebelein makes the plea that in our homes, schools, and churches we must work for the development of critical discrimination in the arts. It does matter what kind of pictures are looked at by children, what kind of music is heard, what kind of television programs are viewed. When so many young people live day by day with shoddy literature and vulgar entertainment, it is no wonder that we now have a generation that is content to wallow in its debasement of taste.

A Biblical Approach to the Arts

Because of what he sees as the needy state of aesthetic life of so many believers, Gaebelein is convinced that a Christian theory of aesthetics needs to be formulated. In an attempt to form such a theory, Gaebelein favors a biblical, rather than a philosophical or theological approach. His view is that the Bible must be central in the entirety of a Christian's education, and he often repeats the statement that all truth is God's truth.

Genesis 1-3 forms the foundation for his view of the arts. As man follows in the creator-maker image of God, his life is made to be great, beautiful, and creative. From several New Testament passages that relate to Christian responsibility, Gaebelein concludes that we are also responsible to God and to our fellowman for what we are doing about the aesthetic side of our lives. Following the admonition of Paul, we are to take every thought captive and make it obedient to Jesus Christ.

Gaebelein makes a particular appeal for that which is true in music. This is because he has encountered "some Christians who, while suspicious of all so-called secular music as worldly, attend with clear conscience performances labeled sacred concerts in which a good deal of third-rate, sentimental music has been baptized, as it were, by association with Christian verse; or in which tawdry, tasteless hymn arrangements, false to any real musical integrity, are deemed religious." He warns of the threat to musical integrity of evangelical worship with the intrusions of certain techniques of the entertainment world: the use of electronic media and the musical devices of Hollywood which debase and cheapen the gospel, dressing it up in the garments of show business. Much of this he sees fostering spectatorism, not worship.

An Unfinished Work

While Gaebelein has made some preliminary observations toward the establishment of a Christian theory of aestheticism, this book is not a finished work on the subject. It is a collection of diverse expressions of Gaebelein's thought written at various periods in his life. Although the book has a single problem in view, the essays form somewhat of a disjunctive chain rather than a logical flow of argument supporting a thesis statement. Such a problem is unavoidable, however, when an editorial decision is made to collect an author's works and print them in their original form as supporting points of one topic without considerable revision to ensure that there is an appropriate flow to the argument.

A Recommendation

In spite of the fact there is an incompleteness to this work, Gaebelein's writings raise some issues that every Christian – parent, teacher, pastor, musician, student, college and school administrator – ought to consider thoughtfully. The high calling of our Lord Jesus Christ deserves that all aspects of our lives – our service, our worship, our outward lives, our inward lives – rise from the mire of mediocrity to the plateau of excellence. Such is the challenge each reader of this book will receive.

O Ma

Choir Tour 1986

This past year God brought together twenty-seven students of the Washington Bible College to become the College Choir. Although this was one of the youngest choirs we have had, their unity and love for the Lord and each other was most obvious.

In the spring the choir toured parts of the Midwest including Canada, presenting the theme, "O Magnify The Lord." Plans and schedules are already underway for a tour through the New England States in the spring of 1987.

Magnify The Lord

Dear Alumni,

It is with joy that I can write to you from our alma mater. I am sure you read in the spring issue of Reflections that it would be the last one for Alumni Editor, Miss Carol Potter. Shortly after reading this announcement, I received a call at my previous position in Minnesota asking me if I might be interested in joining the staff of Washington Bible College. I decided to accept the position and move back East. I have always had a warm spot in my heart for WBC. In addition, the move brought us closer to our family in Pennsylvania. My husband, Paul, and I were with the Greater Europe Mission when he died in December, 1981. We have a "bouncy" little girl, Jill, who is nine years old.

It has been pure joy for me to read your prayer letters. May I encourage those of you who write regular prayer and news letters to put the Alumni Office on your mailing list. It will give us an opportunity to know more about the alumni of WBC/CBS.

I am greatly looking forward to corresponding with you in the future.

Cordially in Christ,

Susan (Mankey, WBC '69) Hiestand
"Alumlight" Editor

Alumni Banquet

*Alumnus-of-the-Year
Rev. Robert Evans
with his wife, Martha*

The Annual Alumni Banquet was held in the Main Lounge of the Washington Bible College on May 16. Over 200 of our alumni came and agreed it was a great time for all. Thanks to the good weather we were able to have a time of re-acquaintance in the picnic area before dinner. The program included special music by Joe and Nancy King, missionaries to Sweden with the Greater Europe Mission; introduction of the new Academic Dean of CBS, Dr. Kenneth Barker; and an update was given by President Fletcher.

The highlight of the evening was the presentation of the "Alumnus-of-the-Year award to Rev. Robert Evans. Jerry Benjamin, the Master of Ceremonies, rehearsed Bob's years at WBC and CBS as a student and as Director of Public Affairs as well as his time as a missionary with the Pocket Testament League. When Jerry presented the award on behalf of the alumni, he commented, "It is about time Bob receive this high honor!" Bob was overwhelmed. It was the first time any of us had seen him speechless! Bob is now serving with BCM International as Director of their European Ministries.

The College Choir then presented the Spring Concert, "O Magnify the Lord." After the concert, many stayed a long time to reminisce and compare notes about their ministries as the evening concluded with fellowship around ice cream and pie.

Be sure to mark your calendar for next year's banquet on May 22, 1987. We would enjoy seeing more of you attend.
